NEW DELHI: The military's ALH fleet, which was grounded nearly three months ago following a fatal crash, is unlikely to fly again for at least three more months, with investigations continuing to determine the exact cause of the accident. Senior Indian Coast Guard pilots who were involved in the crash, which took place on the eastern coast of India, were held in custody.

Hindustan Aeronautics Limited (HAL), which has designed and developed the ALH, has been asked to conduct a thorough investigation by the Ministry of Defence. The investigation is being conducted by the Directorate of Airworthiness, which is a part of the Ministry of Defence.

The prolonged grounding of the ALH fleet is a setback for the Indian Navy, which has been using the aircraft for various operations. The Navy has been using the ALH for various operations, including the rescue of fishermen and the transport of supplies to remote areas.

A high-powered panel headed by a retired Air Force officer is investigating the crash. The panel is expected to submit its report to the Ministry of Defence by the end of the month. The Ministry of Defence has also ordered a review of the ALH fleet's maintenance and safety protocols.

A three-week inspection conducted after the crash has revealed that some key components of the ALH were not working properly. The inspection also found that the ALH's fuel system was not working properly. The Ministry of Defence has ordered a review of the ALH's fuel system and other key components.

"HAL has provided the work on the ALH fleet, which was grounded nearly three months ago following a fatal crash, is unlikely to fly again for at least three more months, with investigations continuing to determine the exact cause of the accident. Senior Indian Coast Guard pilots who were involved in the crash, which took place on the eastern coast of India, were held in custody."
