EXPRESS NEWS SERVICE
JAIPUR, AUGUST 13

A WOMAN in Nagaur district was allegedly thrashed by her alcoholic husband, tied to a motorcycle and dragged around a village, police said on Tuesday.

The video claiming to show the woman tied to the motorcycle and being dragged surfaced online on Monday after which the police took action and arrested the man.

According to Nagaur police, the man identified as Premaram Meghwal (28) who was in an inebriated state had a fight with his wife after he got angry with the way she talked to his mother. In a bid to punish her for this act, he tied her to his bike and later dragged her around the village. The incident was recorded by a bystander who later sent it to Meghwal's sister-in-law.

The incident is said to have taken place around a month back in Naharsinghpura village under Panchaudi police station area in the district.

Nagaur Superintendent of Police, Narayan Togas while talking to The Indian Express said they have taken suo-moto action against the man and have arrested him.

"After we saw the video, we arrested the man though the woman did not file any formal complaint. She is set to return to Nagaur soon as she went to Jaisalmer to stay with her sister-in-law after the incident. We will get to know about the actual reason of the incident and any other abuse that she might have faced at the hands of the accused after talking to her," said Togas.

According to police, Meghwal is unemployed and lives with his mother in the village. He had married the woman around six months back and since then he had constant fights with her. His neighbours said Meghwal was an alcoholic and regularly thrashed his wife. He did not let her talk to anyone in the village either.

Togas said the matter is being investigated.
