Nowadays, she is back in the US, and I'm left alone to manage back home. loneliness.

I try to keep busy by reading the newspaper and watching the TV and scrolling through videos on social media. They help for a while but there is a limit to watching reels. There is no is a limit to watching reels. There is no one to instruct, advise and someties scold me for spending too much times scold me for spending too much time on the cell phone. There is no topic for discussion, no argument. No relative or firend to criticise. There is no eno to caution about the changing weather or childe me to take care of things in the household. No one asks me to do the grocery or visit the nearby market. No one insists I see the doctor.

BY THE TIME SHE APPEARS ON VIDEO CALL, THERE'S A LIST OF INSTRUCTIONS TO FOLLOW APART FROM GIVING THE AFART FROM GIVING THE ACTION TAKEN REPORT ON THE PREVIOUS DAY'S ADVISORY. THIS IS PROBABLY THE BEST PART OF THE DAY.

The perception at home and among relatives and friends is that I'm a non-religious person who is least interested in listening to kirtan or katha: in contast to my wife, who is fond of such gatherings. But now, in her absence, I put on the TV to watch Gurbani recitation from the Golden Temple, Amritsar.

Before calling it a day, I sit and think of those in the evening of their life without partners. How difficult it would be for them to face each new day, alone. The very thought freezes my enverse. I'm grafted life over will again be together after a few months to enjoy marital bilss.

Someone has rightly said you need your companion more in old age than while you are younger. But it's the law of nature, we didn't come to this world together and won't leave it together. So, let us live in the present, enjoying every moment to its fullest and staying con-nected.
